Should such a commission as he saks for be appointed, the question will be carefully and thoroughly examined in all its bearings. If the decision arrived at is that the increasing cost is indispensable without interfering with the administrative working of the Colony, the public will be satisfied that such is really the case, the feeling of which I have spoken will be dispelled, and things will go on more harmoniously. On the other hand if the commission decides that there is room for retremenment, the Colony will then be afforded an apportunity for curtailing expenditure at a time when the financial ontlook is not of the brightest.
